What Can We Learn from Lamar Odom?

by Kelley Lawyers

Get a will. Now! God bless Lamar Odom, his children and his family. Based on media reports, it appears he is in a coma and, if he does not die, will not regain normal body function. The purpose of this post is to discuss reports of his lack of a will and the possibility that his estranged wife Khloe Kardashian is tasked with making decisions on his life, and potentially his finances. If you do not have a will, you should create a will.

A will is essentially a written instrument that states your intentions with regards to your financial and life interests. Depending on your state, you usually need two (2) witnesses to the signing of your will, and notarization is also encouraged. For the past twelve (12) years I have represented families of people injured and killed in 18-wheeler accidents. 95%+ of my clients in the past have not had wills.

What are you going to do? Live life with no will and allow a relative to make decisions on your estate, the well-being of your children, and other interests? If you and your significant other pass who becomes the caretaker for your children? If you do not have a will the court will decide. If you do not have a will what happens if you become comatose and someone needs to make a decision on whether life support should be removed or not. Is this a decision you are comfortable with a disgruntled or separated spouse making? Probably not.
